On Tuesday elections are to be held in eleven States. Iowa, Maryland, Massachusetts, New York and Ohio will elect Governors; Colorado and Nebraska will elect Supreme Judges; Pennsylvania will elect a Treasurer and an Auditor-General; New Jersey a part of its Senate and the Assembly; Virginia one-half of its Senate and its House of Delegates; Mississippi three Railroad Commissioners and Legislature, Iowa, in addition to its Governor, will elect a Legislature. The same is true of Massachusetts, Ohio, Maryland and New York. New York will also elect Comptroller, Treasurer, Attorney-General, Engineer and Surveyor, ten Justices of the Supreme Court, and Representatives in Congress from several districts.

No matter what the complexion of the next Ohio Legislature, Sherman's head is likely to fall into the basket. If it goes Democratic, of course he will have to yield, and if it goes Republican Forker, of ball-box forgers fame, will probably carry off the honors. Whether Sherman's political career is to be ended or not is one of the issues of the campaign.

IN FAVOR OF, AGAINST US.

In less than a week an election will be held in Virginia, when a Legislature to elect a United States Senator is to be chosen. The wily fox Mahone has issued his mandate to the Republicans of the State to make no nominations and to apparently offer no opposition to the Democratic party, but allow the Democrats to go by default. But there are elections in Virginia simple enough to be duped into overconfidence by this flimsy ruse? If there is, he is playing right into the hands of the arch enemy of his State.

In conversation yesterday with Hon. J. Taylor Elyson, chairman of the State Democratic committee, he stated that in about sixty of the one hundred counties of Virginia there was a—be it remembered in spite of Mahone's dictum—opposition to the Democratic nominees. And wherever this opposition appears it will be found by investigation that in those counties in which the Republicans feel confident of their strength they fight openly as Republicans, but where they feel themselves weak they are shielding themselves behind the Farmers' Alliance and call themselves "Alliance Democrats."

The time has come when there must be no merely mouthedness about this matter, and no paltering with any side issue on the part of the Virginia Democracy. As far as any Southern States are concerned, we cannot afford to recognize any kind of a Democrat but a Democrat. The Republican party has never carried a Southern State as Republicans, but whenever they have accomplished success it has been through masquerading in some disguise to conceal their native deformity and hideousness.

We of Virginia certainly should appreciate this truth. When Mahone started his Readjuster campaign it will easily be remembered that he called himself a "Jeffersonian Democrat," and his dupes and followers, blinded by his alluring but delusive promises of relieving them of that terrible incubus upon their prosperity and welfare, the State debt, followed in his wake as "Readjuster Democrats." What was the result? No sooner had he landed his point and won victory, then he carried himself, his party, and the State squarely in the bosom of the Republicans. And so it threatens to be now. We paltered with "Readjuster Democrats," and found ourselves committed to radicalism and negro supremacy. If now we palter with "Alliance Democracy" we will soon find ourselves hand in glove with negro-lovers, Force-bill advocates and the would-be destroyers of Southern life and Southern civilization.

The Democratic party fully recognizes the grievances of which the farmers complain, and is now, as it has always been, ready and anxious to correct these grievances to the extent of its ability. Its fundamental principles are "The Greatest Good to the Greatest Number," and "Equal Rights for All, with Special Privileges for None," and it therefore always seeks to advance the best interests of the farmers as of all other classes. But beyond that it cannot go, and the Democracy of Virginia and of the whole South must adopt for its motto "Whoever is not for us is against us." There can be but two parties in this country, and whoever is not a member of one is a member of the other. It is well enough for our farmers to ally themselves together as farmers to protect their interests, but when they enter politics they must perform all themselves with one or the other of these two parties. Let there then be no sailing under false colors; let there be no such thing as Alliance Democrats or Alliance Republicans; let every Democrat beware of overconfidence and Republican duplicity, but turn out in full force and vote the straight Democratic ticket. And when he goes to the polls let him remember that whoever is opposed to the Democracy, no matter under what guise, is, in reality, no more and no less than a Republican.

MR. TILDEN'S WISHES DISREGARDED.

The decision of the New York Court of Appeals, which has refused to narrow majority of one in a bench of seven to sustain the will of Mr. Tilden, under the terms of which about five millions of dollars were left to a city of New York, has been established with profound regret by all persons in that community who are not immediately connected with the heirs.

The conclusion of the long contest over the last testament of Mr. Tilden is indeed a surprising one. This Tilden was drawn by Mr. Tilden himself, one of the most distinguished as well as one of the most successful lawyer practitioners of his day, in which character he rose to the highest personal consideration long before he had acquired anything more than a local celebrity as a politician. It was in the legal profession that he accumulated the enormous fortune which he will be in the larger proportion to the public object already named.

Not only were the provisions of this instrument formulated by Mr. Tilden himself, a lawyer of great reputation and a man remarkable for a very penetrating, acute and cautious intellect, but they were also submitted to the scrutiny of several of the ablest and most experienced members of the New York city bar, among others, if we are not mistaken, to Mr. James C. Carter, who is an acknowledged leader in his profession.

In spite of all the learning, experience and legal acumen brought to bear to perfect the terms of the will, and to render the instrument impregnable, it has been overturned and the public bequest declared invalid on a ground which will be regarded by many whose opinion is entitled to weight as decidedly frivolous. The majority of the court decide that this bequest is illegal because, under the terms of the will, it was left in the discretion of the trustees as to the special manner in which it should be carried out.

There is no doubt whatever that it was Mr. Tilden's intention that five millions of dollars should be devoted exclusively to the establishment of a public library in the city of New York. This fact has never been disputed, because it is embodied in the plainest manner in the language of the will, and yet because the testator saw fit, as he was fully justified in doing by a practical view of all the circumstances of the case, to enlarge the authority of the trustees in carrying out his general wish, the trust falls to the ground, the people are deprived of a great institution and the fortune of the testator goes to relatives whom he did not consider as having any special claim upon his affection or his benevolence.

The three members of the Court of Appeals who dissented from the judgment of their four associates are pronounced by the New York papers to be lawyers of a learning equal to, if not superior to, that of the majority who shaped the decision, and the opinions which they delivered in the case are declared to be of very great weight.

It is to be regretted that the noble benefaction of Mr. Tilden should have been defeated on the strength of what at the best is a mere technicality, and by a majority of one vote only, and that vote not entitled to the highest consideration on account of the attainments of the judge who cast it. A law will be at once passed to prevent such a miscarriage in the future, but for a long time to come it is hardly probable that another Tilden will arise—a man of an enormous fortune, of great public spirit and with no very near kinsmen to advance a natural claim upon his bounty.

According to the most recent announcement one of the heirs will give up a large portion of her share in order that the people of New York may enjoy some of the fruits of Mr. Tilden's intended generosity, but the original gift is so much curtailed that the good that will be accomplished will be comparatively small.

A MELANCHOLY SPECTACLE.

To all who are interested in the welfare of Ireland there could not have been a more melancholy spectacle than that which was presented in the bloody contest between the followers of Redmond and the McCarthys in Cork on Tuesday. Whatever may have been the ground of the differences which arose between Parnell and Dillon and O'Brien in the lifetime of the former, no one who has followed the careers of O'Brien and Dillon can doubt for an instant that these two men are animated by the highest patriotism, and that they are prepared to make the most extreme sacrifices to advance the prosperity of their country, and yet when they appeared upon the streets of Cork they were saluted with loud cries of "murderers," and an attempt was made to assassinate them in their tracks.

This shows to what an extreme the antagonism between the two wings of the Irish party has been carried, and how wide is the gulf which now separates them. So far as can be seen, there is no prospect that this gulf will be closed. Ireland, which had for so many years under the leadership of Parnell presented a united front to its enemies, is once more plunged into the political confusion which has done so much to blight its fortunes in the past. The old story of vituperation and riot is being repeated, only in a more intense form than ever before. The leaders, instead of coming together and consulting for the public good, are torn apart by mutual dislikes and hatreds, which lead them to expend all their energies in attacking each other instead of the common enemy. The people are divided into factions, which are bent upon giving a unanimous and concentrated expression to the patriotism of Ireland, but upon beating the drums and cracking the skulls of opponents of their own race with shillelahs.

For the time being the future seems almost hopeless, and the prospect is made all the more discouraging by the fact that a united Ireland, disarmed by one purpose and not to be diverted from it by any influence whatever, would be morally certain to bring about all those ends for which O'Connell and Grattan spoke with so much eloquence, and Parnell, the greatest of Irish patriots, because the most practical, strove for so long a period with so much success.

All the probabilities point to the return of Mr. Gladstone to power at an early day, and from his recent acts and speeches the inference is justified that if Ireland were to send a harmonious delegation to Parliament the coming Premier would crown his great career by granting the Emerald Isle as large a measure of home rule as it could reasonably claim. This, we are afraid, is now impossible, and will undoubtedly continue so long as Ireland exposes itself to the strife which is now going on among its own citizens.

The popularity of the late William Henry Smith was so great that upon the strength of his reputation one of his sons has been elected to Parliament—a man who is in no way remarkable. It is an interesting fact in connection with the father that although he had raised himself so high in the opinion of the House of Commons that he was advanced to its leadership, and although he was such a favorite even in the most exclusive aristocratic circles that he had his pal at his funeral, and the Queen sent a special wreath to his funeral, yet he was never elevated during his lifetime to the station of a peer. In the last year of his life he had become a hopeless invalid and it would have been a graceful act to have conferred a peerage upon him. Instead of doing this, he was simply appointed warden of the Cinque Ports, a purely honorary office. The failure to transfer him to the Upper House was the result of lingering aristocratic prejudices, which, in spite of his personal popularity, could not forget that he was a man of the humblest origin, and that he was interested in a very plain business.

Governor Patterson appears to have stirred up a very muddy hole when he called the Pennsylvania Senate together in extra session and imposed upon it the duty of investigating the complicated public funds which have recently done so much to bring disgrace upon the reputation of the Keystone State. Never did a public body, at least so far as its controlling membership is concerned, which in this instance is Republican, have a more ungenial and distasteful task to perform. The conduct of the Republican majority has been marked by great ingenuity in their effort to evade the duty imposed upon them, but not being able to shirk it entirely they have brought to light against their will much that is extremely discreditable to their party. As to have been confidently expected Quay is found to have been involved in the Bardsley frauds, a suspicious deal bill for $2,877 being discovered among the papers of the broken Keystone Bank, which showed that the money was sent by Bardsley to Quay and used by that gentleman, either on his own account or the account of the Republican committee. Quay denies that this due bill represents any questionable action on his part, but it will take a more plausible tongue than even he possesses to remove the unfavorable impression which the disclosure has made.

Mr. S. W. Wellford Corbin, of the Eighth district, is very anxious for a farmer to be nominated in the Eighth Congressional district to succeed the late General Lee, and has sent a circular urging such action to all the allies of the district. This is very well, provided the Democratic farmers nominate and elect a Democrat. To do that Mr. Corbin, this seems to be all that he asks for, his candidate refuses to run as an Independent candidate.

A Buffalo Visitor to the Unveiling. Mr. Charles T. Dabney, of Buffalo, N. Y., reached the city yesterday to participate in the exercises of the Wickham monument to-day. Mr. Dabney, who was a warm friend of the late General Wickham, is the secretary of the late General Wickham Association and was division superintendent of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad at the time of the general's death, and is now superintendent of the Western New York and Pennsylvania railroad with headquarters at Buffalo. Mr. Dabney is a native of Richmond and has many friends in the city. He is a first-class railroad man and moved to the North last October to accept his present position and declare himself pleased with everything except the winter temperature of his Northern home.

MARRIED IN MANCHESTER.

Miss Lella A. Robertson Wedded to Mr. Charles S. Snellings.

OTHER NEWS FROM OVER THE RIVER.

Shot by His Brother While Hunting—Afraid of Bodily Harm—Illustrated Sermons. The Chesterfield Troop—Notes.

MANCHESTER BUREAU (RICHMOND TIMES.)

Branch Office, corner Twelfth and Hull Sts. (The sun shines upon a happy bride as a proverb as old as the marriage ceremony, and verily old Sol never behaved himself in a more becoming manner than on yesterday. A stray sunbeam as it stole through one of the pretty stained windows of the Presbyterian church and danced merrily around the altar witnessed a scene of beauty and an event of happiness.

The beautiful sacred edifice was crowded to its full capacity, the occasion being the marriage of Miss Lella A. Robertson to Mr. Charles S. Snellings. The front seats in the centre of the church were reserved for the families of the happy pair, and at 2:30 P. M., the appointed hour for the ceremony, standing room could hardly be obtained.

Promptly on time the bridal party entered through the entrance facing Porter street. The bride, presiding at the organ, played Mendelssohn's beautiful wedding march, and the ushers came down the right-hand aisle in twos. First came Messrs. Sylvan Patch, best man, and W. W. Friend. On reaching the altar they separated, one going to the right and the other to the left, and here faced one another. They were followed by Messrs. W. H. Washington and R. A. Coddin, the other ushers, who took positions next to them. Then came the bride and groom, who stood facing the altar, thus forming a half square. Rev. Charles N. Van Houton, pastor of the church, assisted by Rev. Luther R. Thornhill, performed the ceremony, and the party went out by the left-hand aisle and through the door leading out on Porter street. After receiving the congratulations of a host of friends they were driven to the Richmond and Danville depot, where they took the 3 P. M. train for Atlanta, where they will be the guest of the bride's uncle, Rev. Dr. King. Before coming back they will visit several places in Florida, and will return home via Washington.

Among those present were a large number of friends from Richmond, J. H. Watson, Esq., from Cresco, Dr. Griffin and others from Burkeville. After receiving the congratulations of a host of friends they were driven to the Richmond and Danville railroad.

The bride is a daughter of the late Mr. M. R. Robertson, is highly accomplished, and has not only a pretty face, but is possessed of a most charming character. By her gentle manner and lovable disposition she endeared herself to a very large circle of admiring friends. She is a brunette of slender and graceful form, and was clad in a beautiful trailing suit of blue plaid cloth, with hat and gloves to match, and in her hand carried a lovely bouquet of white flowers.

Mr. Snellings is the only son of the late George Snellings, Esq. He is an engineer on the Danville railroad, and a young man in popular and popular esteem. The popularity of the young couple was attested in the large number of presents that were received, many of them coming from friends in distant cities. The groom's present to the bride was a handsome set of diamonds.

Chesterfield Cavalry Troop will turn out in full force to-day and take part in the sham battle at the air grounds.

The postoffice will be closed to-day after 10 o'clock.

A wagon of the Union Flour Mills Company broke down on Hull street yesterday afternoon, spilling a good deal of mill feed.

The streets yesterday presented quite a deserted appearance, the result of so many of our people attending the State Fair. Manchester and Chesterfield are both well represented and their exhibits attract much attention.

Business will be pretty generally suspended to-day and everybody will go to the Fair. There was baptizing at Branch's church in Chesterfield last Sunday and Monday, and before then candidates receiving the ordinance.

The tracks of the Decatur street car line at the corner of Seventh and Decatur streets are being fixed. This is the place where the car will stop. It is estimated that when the work is completed the company will fix the tracks at Seventh and Hull streets, and the water running down the gutter is diverted and flows lower Hull street, thereby causing a nuisance.

The hustings court was in session yesterday considering divorce matters. Judge Ingram was on the bench.

The revival services at West-End and Fifth-street churches continue, and much interest is being manifested.

A series of illustrated sermons were begun at the Bainbridge-street church last evening. The title of the series is "The Wise and Foolish Virgins and the Wise and Foolish Builders." Three pictures were shown last evening, and a sermon was preached and the pictures described by the pastor, Rev. J. R. Thornhill. These illustrations will be preached every Wednesday evening. The attendance was quite large last evening and the meeting very interesting and instructive. The first picture shown was, "From Sea to Sea, Forth to Meet the Bridegroom," the second, "They All Slumbered and Slept," the third and last, "Give Us Your Oil."

Mr. Rosser L. Moody and bride, nee Miss Bertha Robinson, have returned from their bridal tour. They visited New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and New England points and spent Tuesday last with relatives in Fredericksburg.

Mr. William Lipscomb and his brother James went hunting yesterday. While separated and looking for birds that had been scattered Mr. William Lipscomb dashed a bird and fired at it. His brother shot at the bird at the same time, and but for a tree that was between the brothers the former would have been badly shot. As it was, he was hit with several shot, one striking him in the back of the nose, inflicting a painful wound. William G. Davis yesterday swore out a warrant against Adolphus Hargrove, charging that he was afraid the latter would do him bodily harm. The affair grew out of the recent difficulty between these two men, which resulted in the stabbing of Hargrove. Davis was committed to jail and at the present term of the hustings court was acquitted on the ground of self-defense. Mayor Atkinson removed Hargrove to give bond in the sum of $100, which he could not give, and was remanded to jail in default. This was the only case before the Honor.

Mr. S. F. Gilliland, of the South Boston Times, is in the city.

Mr. John A. Burgess of Richmond, and Miss Annie E. Woodbridge of Powhatan county were married at the residence of Mr. L. S. Woodbridge, the bride's father, the 21st inst. Rev. R. H. Winfree officiated, and a large number of friends were present to witness the ceremony and wish the happy couple much success in their new life.

Miss Aggie Bensten, of Portsmouth, is visiting her brother, Mr. Robert S. Rivers, of this city.

Miss Jennings, of Lynchburg, is visiting the Misses Hanks, of this city.

Mr. Fairly, wife and daughter, of Gloucester county, spent Tuesday night and yesterday with Mr. F. A. Lamb, on Thirteenth street.

Commissioner-of-Revenue Samuel R. Owens, who has been quite sick, is improving.

Mr. Joel C. Dargatzis and wife, of Apomattox county, are visiting Rev. L. R. Thornhill.

"A Son of Thespis"

is the title of Milton Nobles' latest and best drama, which will be seen at the Theatre Friday night and Saturday matinee. "A Son of Thespis" will be given Saturday night. Mr. Nobles and his pretty wife, Dollie, are well-known here, and their support this season is even better than before, while ten special seats will be given to the "A Son of Thespis" is said to greatly resemble General Fitz Lee.

Does Trust on Foot?

Certainly, in one instance, it does. Hood's Sassafras is the great protection against the dangers of impure blood, which will cure or prevent all diseases of this class. It has well won its name of the best blood purifier.

JUSTICE JOHN'S COURT.

The Attendance was Small by Reason of the Excitement on Broad Street.

Every man who could secure any thing from a goat to a broken down car mule, or from a wheelbarrow to a Hanover county cart, was on Broad street yesterday morning in unmistakable manner soliciting passengers to the Fair Grounds. Of course the audience at the police court suffered, as many of these liberal-minded gentlemen are regular attendants upon the sessions of the august assembly.

There seemed just a shade of disappointment to come over the placid features of the Judge as he scanned the docket and saw that none of the smooth gentlemen whose business it is to attend fairs and see that in the night, had been apprehended on the first day and night of the Fair. Of course, this could not be helped, for since the adjournment of the Municipal Conference, there have been a number of visitors in the city whose appearance could not minister and settle, and the officers could not tell whether they had all left or whether the new visitors were a belated part of the former excursion.

Appearances are deceptive and you can't tell anything much about the man who is in town, but they are as hard to get at as the settlement of the debt question, and the officer who takes in a supposed bunco stealer, and then from papers on his person finds only a district letter from the Farmers' Alliance, is liable not to get one of the new overcoats which the board has ordered for the winter season. Of course heart beats beneath a ragged coat, but nine times out of ten he is beaten if he contributes, and it is charitable to credit the man with an honest heart—that is, at least one which beats regularly. There are some strange crooks in town, but they are as hard to get at as the settlement of the debt question, and the officer who takes in a supposed bunco stealer, and then from papers on his person finds only a district letter from the Farmers' Alliance, is liable not to get one of the new overcoats which the board has ordered for the winter season.

George Taylor is a colored citizen whose greatly depleted wardrobe constantly confronted him with pictures of poverty, so he scales the back fence of his neighbor, Absolom Eggleston, and proceeds to fix himself in garments suitable for the approaching frosts. He will not need these clothes for six months, as the city jail is heated by steam.

Sidney Peasos was fined $20 for carrying concealed weapons—to wit, a pistol, a silver watch, and a ring, and a fine of $10 for the same.

Clara Anderson and Lila Bailey had each bought new dresses for the Fair yesterday, and both had hats big enough for the entire season. A few small birds, the plumage from an ostrich and two and a few birds, brought from Marchal Hall and La France roses adorned each of these hats, and of course the question of the superior beauty of these crowns of glory was not to be settled by simple words, so the fair rivals for head-gear supremacy settled it with attacks upon the golden locks of each other, and settled with the Justice with $2.50 each.

James Miller, being sent to jail for sixty days for white drunk and disorderly upon the streets.

Arthur Scott, a colored boy, was whipped in court by his mother after being convicted of stealing $1.00 from the person of Miss Anna Henshaw.

John D. Shurey, a young white man, was charged with mental irresponsibility, and a commission of lunacy was ordered for him.

Charles Rice and C. T. Whitfield, both white, were sent to jail for thirty days for drunkenness.

E. R. Morton, colored, J. M. Tomblinson, white, Margaret Holleran, white, and Margaret Morris, colored, each were fined $2 for being drunk.
